New York State Buckles Up For Safety Belt Law

Albanian - Local, state and federal government agencies, citizen groups, businesses and professional organizations are pitching in to help New York State's landmark safety belt law in the nation.

The law, effective January 1, with an information legal warning period which began December 1, will potentially save 300 to 400 lives, reduce or prevent more than 70,000 injuries, and save as much as $250 million each year for New Yorkers. It is expected to serve as a model for safety belt laws in other states.

When Governor Mario M. Cuomo signed the law on July 12, he directed Motor Vehicles Commissioner John A. Passidomo, as chair of the Governor's Traffic Safety Committee, to monitor its implementation, evaluate its effectiveness, and report his findings to the governor.

Such diverse groups as the State Police, the NYS Medical Society, the New York Public Interest Research Group, the NYS Society of Professional Engineers, the Professional Insurance Agents of New York, the New York State Coalition for Safety

Belt Use and the New York State Automobile Dealers, Inc. have announced their support of the law.

Sponsored by State Senator Norman J. Levy (R-Nassau) and Assemblyman Vincent J. Graber, Sr. (D-West Seneca), the law requires that all front seat occupants use the safety belts provided in the vehicle, and that all children under the age of 10 be buckled up, no matter where they sit in the vehicle. Children under age four must ride in federally-approved child safety restraint devices.

Drivers may be issued summonses if they or any of their passengers under age 16 are not in compliance with the law. Occupants age 16 and older may be ticketed themselves if they are not complying.

During December, law enforcement officers will begin to issue warnings about using safety belts and restraint devices. As of January 1, 1985, violators are subject to a fine of up to $50 for each offense.

The law does not apply to emergency vehicles, taxi or livery vehicles, trucks weighing 18,000 pounds or more, or buses. Under an existing law, however, school bus drivers must still wear safety belts.

Vehicles manufactured on or after January 1, 1968, are required to have safety belts for each seating position. Vehicles designated as 1967 models are required to have two belts in the front seat and a belt for each passenger position in the rear seat; 1965 and 1966 models need only to have two belts in the front seat. Older vehicles are not required to be equipped with seat belts and people in these vehicles are excluded from the law.

Although safety belt use is advisable for the overwhelming majority of auto occupants, physicians will be authorized to give some medical exemptions from the law. The exemptions, carefully delineated by the NYS Medical Society, should be given before persons are stopped for violations, not after.

Current law requires that children under age four ride in approved safety restraint devices and that children aged four through six be secured in such devices or wear safety belts. In addition, holders of learners' permits for Class 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 or 6 driver licenses must wear safety belts when operating vehicles under the permits. These provisions will continue to apply until the new law supplants them on January 1, 1985.

In 1983, 741 reportable accidents occurred every day in New York State. Of those, 64 percent resulted in death or injury. Research shows that 50 to 65 percent of these deaths or injuries could have been prevented with safety belts.

"The non-use of safety belts impacts negatively on society as a whole, not just the person killed or injured," said Commissioner Passidomo, replying to safety belt critics. "Government mandates safety devices such as brakes and brake lights, safety glass, turn signals, mirrors and headlights. It regulates when, where and how fast traffic flows. Requiring the use of safety belts is just another step in making New York State's highways safe for everyone. It improves the public health without added cost."

Central America: The Vacation Hot Spot of the 80's

by Brian S. Graham

Christmas vacation is just around the corner and this year I've decided to pack and get away from it all. A friend of mine suggested spending a few weeks in Central America. I decided to call the Acme Travel Agency for more information....

"Hello, Acme Travel Agency, may I help you?"

"Hello, I said, I'm thinking of spending a few weeks in beautiful Central America, do you have any suggestions?"

"Yes I do," answered a female voice obviously skilled in the art of selling. "Try Canada instead."

"I really had something different in mind, you know, I want to be able to sunbathe on the beaches of Nicaragua, or skinny dip in their harbors, and maybe drive over to El Salvador and hike the wilderness trails."

"Well, she said, constraining some laughter, you may very well be hearing and seeing more of Central America on the news, then any vacation would provide."

"What do you mean?" I asked bewildered.

"Aren't you aware of the United States activities in Central America, especially Nicaragua and El Salvador?"

"I've been kinda busy with school and all..."

"Let me tell you, she began, you see the United States has been supporting the Salvadoran government since 1979. We have been sending military aid and advisors to El Salvador, trying to help them stop the leftist communist guerrilla terrorists, who have been attempting to over-throw the government."

Since the Reagan administration took over, there have been a few controversies as to whether or not our government was actually supporting a government involved with death squads, nun killing, and violating human rights. However all of this has since blown over."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because of the covert war that the United States has been involved with in Nicaragua."

"Um, what covert war?"

"The covert war intended to destabilize and frighten the Sadanista government. You see, the CIA has been mining the Nicaraguan Harbors and instructing leftist democratic guerrilla terrorists on how to neutralize and/or over-throw the Nicaraguan government!"

"Gee whiz, gosh, by golly, that sounds like a contradiction to the policy we have been endorsing in El Salvador!"

"It sure does, she said, but President Reagan doesn't say we are supporting leftist democratic guerrilla terrorists..."

"What does he call them?"

"Freedom Fighters."

"I see. Why do you suppose President Reagan recently honored the veterans from the Vietnam war and tried to clear the governments conscience by dedicating the memorial of a granite wall with 58,000 names of deceased Vietnam vets inscribed in it?"

"Oh that's easy," she replied. "Have you ever heard of that old cliché, history repeats itself?"

"Tell me again about Canada."

Shea's Buffalo Theater

Shea's Buffalo Theater announces a search for area college and university students to serve on its first College Advisory Board. As a member of this Advisory Board, a student would act as a liaison between Shea's and his/her campus community. In addition to aiding to relay information on theater events to the campus, the student would act as a "finger on the pulse" of his or her school, keeping the Shea's informed of the interests, needs, and preferences of its student audience.

An active participation on the College Advisory Board (C.A.B.) would give valuable experience to students in any discipline, particularly those studying Management, Communication, Theater, Public Relations and Fine Arts. It would provide the opportunity for a hands-on involvement in an established arts organization and in the promotion of the Arts.

Interested students should submit a resume (or a brief biography outlining their qualifications and achievements) no later than

December 31, 1984, to: Robin Lenhard - Public Relations Coordinator, Shea's Buffalo Theater, 646 Main Street, Buffalo, New York 14202.

Applicants will be judged, and C.A.B. members selected, on the basis of (1) leadership experience, (2) campus and community involvement, and (3) interest in the Arts. All students are eligible and encouraged to apply.

Shea's Buffalo Theater is a not-for-profit organization serving the greater Buffalo area as its center for the performing arts. It was opened in 1926 as a grand movie palace and has since been placed on the National Register of Historic Places. The theater's auditorium seats 3187 patrons and is decorated in the lavishly ornamental style of the era in which it was built.

Till I'm Dead

by Curtis Tanner

I will smell the flowers until I am dead. I will watch the ocean waves coming ashore from some distant place. I will color the sky purple till I'm dead. The rainbow will be my friend with colors of purple, blue and white. In the darkness of my closet I will find peace. My words will be few, but my cries shall cause wars. I will smell the scent of flowers in distant desolate places, in regions of cold and ice. Where no man shall want to live. In the darkness of my closet, when the door is shut, the waves will carry me away to that distant place of rainbows and flowers.

Off The Press

Works by sixteen artists who have been at the forefront of the photo-printmaking process are on view at Bethune Hall, 2nd Floor Gallery, U.B. Main St. Campus. The exhibition Off the Press: 16 Contemporary Photo-Printmakers will be open from 12 p.m. to 4 p.m. Wed., Fri., (Thurs., 6-9 p.m.) from November 20 to December 20. Organized by the gallery at State University of New York at New Paltz, the exhibit of 45 prints is touring under the auspices of the Gallery Association of New York State.

Curators Ann Lovett and Neil Trager note that "the relationship between photography and printmaking began with the use of the camera as a drawing aid. It was not until the early 1960's that the vast potential of this mixed media approach to image-making received notice." The young artists represented in Off the Press combine photography and printmaking techniques in innovative ways. Photogravure, photo-etching, photo-silkscreen, and offset lithography are just a few of the mediums employed. Wendy Calman's whimsical "Ben Her," one of the three-dimensional "prints" in the exhibit, combines photolithography, silk-screen, embossing, metal, wood, and plexiglass.

The artists included are a refreshingly diverse group. "While some choose to return to early processes and classical concerns, others pursue new explorations of form and technique. Each is in some way involved with the relationship of image to process, and each has developed a unique personal vocabulary of expression." Many of the prints contain elements of portraiture--as in works by Conrad Gleber, Joan Lyons, Keith Smith, and Philip Zimmermann--or of landscape--Jon Goodman's sensuous "Waterfall, Gorge of the Covattannaz," John Craig's "geoscapes," and Syl Labrot's "synthetic landscapes," for example.

Other artists in the show are: Wendy Calman, Paula Crane, Charles Gershwin, Jill Gussow, Scott Hyde, Kathleen Kenyon, Judith Natal, Ted Thomas, John Wood.

Election

by Daniel Miori

Tuesday, November 6, held no surprise for anyone, unless, of course, it was a surprise at the sweeping nature of the Republican victory in the White House.

From the start, the republican campaign had success written all over it. It consistently showed polish, purpose, and successful execution, where as the Democrats staged a campaign based on the rather dubious idea that people would vote for a candidate who addressed the issues.

The Buffalo Hyatt Regency, site of the Erie County Democratic and Republican election night festivities, perhaps served to demonstrate very clearly the differences in the campaigns.

Democratic headquarters could have been the scene of any large wedding. Aside from the fact that all the local news agencies were present and most of the hall was empty. It looked almost thrown together, functional, practical, and no more. The band even included an accordion player.

Even the location of the Democrats spoke of a kind of bargain hunting frugality. They were in an out-of-the-way ball room, with no windows, located on the second floor so that to get to it you had to go from the lobby down a hallway, up an elevator, turn right (walk past the mezzanine overlooking Republican headquarters) down another hall, and turn left.

Republican headquarters, on the other hand, was held in the greenhouse type terrace past the lobby. So that if you walked in the front door, you would take perhaps thirty paces to the security guard at the entrance.

The word for the night was "organization". It was a stage show that went off without a hitch. From the first moment the general public was allowed in, at 9:00 o'clock, a carnival atmosphere prevailed. An atmosphere that only intensified, in spite of local defeats, as the presidential returns came in.

Those who volunteered for the work at these events also told the story of the Republican attraction. There was new blood everywhere on the multi-level, glitzy, luxurious Republican terrace, while the Democratic cave was manned by the party stalwarts and television reporters in running shoes.

It almost seemed that the Democrats were beaten and they knew it. All the talk of a Truman like, come from behind victory was just to save face. The preparation was just not there. America had been totally underwhelmed by Mondale's cockeyed optimism in his campaign of issues, and the Reagan people accomplished what was perhaps the most successful "selling" of a candidate ever.

The Much Maligned Computer Science Major

by John (C.B.) Wersan

Little is known of the strange breed, known as 'Majoralis Scientificus Computordorus' otherwise known as a "Computer Science Major." What are their breeding habits? What do they eat? And what the hell is that language they are speaking? In my loins and in-depth study of this creature I learned one major thing, they are much maligned, they are very timid creatures and very rarely venture forth from the computer room. Their eating habits are quite simple once you pay close attention. This diet does not include "Daemen Food" but pizza, chicken wings and massive quantities of alcoholic beverages, the latter plays an especially large and major part in their diet. They come in all shapes, sizes, and colors, and yes they are two sexes (Maybe three sexes).

They are very curious creatures and will, if unmolested, communicate with you. Their mode of communication is a little hard to understand at first, but with time, like a fungus, it grows on you. They are fascinated with a small green box and will spend hours sitting in front of it. Their mode of dress leaves a little to be desired. You often think that they are on drugs, but that is just their normal state. When and if they do venture forth from the computer room, they are in little droves otherwise known as 'clicks'. Computer Science majors can be found not only in computer rooms but also somewhere in the vicinity of arcades. I believe this to be because they derive some form of sustenance from the slowing screens.

One curious observation seen is that they often talk to these small green boxes, whether it be in a soothing, passionate melody, or a harsh, bitter feud. This is most common during the period of time that they (this species) relax. This is often seen when they entertain themselves by the use of 'Strategic Co-ordination Devices' or simply put, 'sames'. It is often during this time, that they get paranoid, for they will insist that the green box is against them, and out to 'blow dem out of da cosmos'. It is rare that the use of physical violence is implemented by this species, but it will usually bring them back into a semi-conscious state.

The Leader of this 'Group' is a short male, who I might add seems to be in power struggle with some of the other, younger males of the species. In my studies of this species I heard one term used a lot to describe a small group of males, 'Hacker' was the term, though I did not see any cutting implements.

As finals roll around, the computer room begins to fill with an endless mountain of 'soda' cans, candy wrappers litter the floor, and a strange thing comes over them. As if they haven't had their rabies shot, they growl at anyone and everyone, and become obsessed with the theft of software, though I never saw them take anything.

Their mating habits are unique, in that they do not like to associate with outsiders, and often inbreed among themselves. When I first heard about this species, I was told that they looked like 'fat little butterballs'. This however was not true of the first ones that I encountered, but with this new 'litter' there did seem to be one among the group.

I think it is now about time that I described some of the members of the species. The first one that I encountered was a slender male of medium height, who did not fit in with the others, unlike them, he talked quite profusely, and about anything. I later learned that this was the result of a childhood accident (His mother dropped him on his head). The next one I encountered was like the first, but he rarely talked to the other members of the group. This was because he was trying to break into the NORAD defense computers (Although unsuccessful, he did manage to break into Joe's doughnut shop, he is now serving 5 to 10 for petty theft).

The next one must have also been a math major, because he was always talking about A.D.D. (Strange person, fun to drink with). Another person I had the short time to meet must have met with an unfortunate accident, he is often referred to in conversation as 'dearly departed'. The final person I have encountered is unusual to say the least. The professors discussed technical problems with him. I thought at first he was a roving repairman. I later found out that he was the only student working on tenure.

There was one other person that I thinks needs mentioning, he would drop in on occasion to talk to the other members. He must have had a motor-coordination problem, as his head moved whenever he talked.

Cheerleading

by Lisa Florio

For the first time ever Daemen has a cheerleading squad. Organizing such a squad has been attempted numerous times before, but this time the enthusiasm and dedication of the girls has paid off.

This year's squad consists of Cathy Boltz, Kathy Cannon, Tracy Crope, Dawn Dick, Debbie Dorsey, Lydia Engo, Dawn Pangrazio, with Captains Paula Peters and Kristen Seitz.

Right now, the girls plan to cheer only for the men's basketball team unless the girls and guys play a doubleheader, when they have agreed to cheer for both. They have discussed cheering for the women, too, though. It hasn't yet been decided if they will cheer for baseball or not. The girls will wait and see how things go with basketball first.

Women's Basketball

by Lisa Florio

The Daemen College women's basketball team, the Lady Warriors are looking forward to a successful 1984-85 season. This is coach Randi Coates' first season here at Daemen. He has a young team to work with--six freshman, five sophomores, and one junior. There are only a few returning players. With a new coach, a new team, and a new Athletic Center it should be an interesting season.

The Lady Warriors opened their season on Wed., Nov. 14 at home against Houghton College. It was the first game in the new Athletic Center.

It will be a busy season for the Lady Warriors with a 21 game schedule--11 away, 10 home. They play against many old opponents, including one from Canada.

Men's Basketball

by Lisa Florio

Daemen College's Golden Warriors, last season's National Little College Northeast Divisional Basketball Champs, will be tackling an ambitious schedule and taking steps to upgrade the program to the Division III level of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA).

The "cagers" will be playing in the new Athletic Center. The Golden Warriors opened the 1984-85 season on the road Nov. 17 at Utica Tech. The home opener, against Buffalo State, was Tuesday Nov. 27 at 8:00 p.m. in the Athletic Center.

Coach Gil Licata is returning for his second season and welcomes back last year's leading scorer, Dale Sullivan (17.9 pts per game) and forwards Brian Blanc and Gary Carter. It was a good recruiting year, with 10 freshman, including All-Catholic High School Players Kevin Powers (St. Mary's of Lancaster), Mike Copeland (Turner) and Mike Wells (Mt. St. Joe's).

Coach Licata hopes to build a solid program. With the new Athletic Center, upgrading to NCAA Division III, and having a young team, a "new beginning" in college basketball is ahead for the Golden Warriors.
